About Chattelle and Education Again

To the Editor of the Napanee Express.

Sir.—In your last issue is a communication from "J. A. D." of Bath whom I recognize as James A. Ducentre, B. A.—my old opponent in the Jarvis—Tighe—Ducentre—Pringle discussion in your columns some fifteen months ago. It is a pleasure to differ in opinion on great questions with a controversialist like your learned correspondent, Mr. Ducentre, who is always fair and courteous and writes with evident sincerity. But these commendable qualities and qualifications do not save our friend from limping badly when he attempts to get down through the cobble stones and boulders of error—mossy and mouldy with the ages of centuries—to the bed rock of causes and first principles. While Mr. Ducentre finds himself "agreeing with some" of my positions on the educational question and "differing from others," his communication is not a direct criticism but is so by implication. There is "one conspicuous omission" in my Chattelle article (which by the way, was not fully quoted by THE EXPRESS) and this omission was "the power of habit." Of course I fully concede the great power of habit as a factor in moulding character and determining future conduct, but could not in a brief review go into all phases of so broad a subject. That part of the subject is more fully dealt with in an address on "Education" given last winter in Stratford at the annual convention of the O. B. K. As. which has since been published in full in connection with the official report, and which I shall be blessed to mail to those who may have sufficient interest in the subject to send me their names and addresses.

With very much of Mr. Ducentre's interesting letter I heartily agree, especially as to the desirability of inculcating into the minds of youth "the great ordinary rules of correct ethical, social, political and legal conduct, and the great general principles sanctioning these rules." I also agree in the main with the methods he suggests for doing this, so far as they are practicable. But while I agree with him as to "the power of habit" I must differ from him radically as to the power he ascribes to early training and education. He says no one becomes a great criminal at once—that in early childhood the tendencies to crime "can be easily conquered and restrained within proper and normal limits." He quotes the proverb, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it." With due deference to the author of that proverb and to Mr. Ducentre himself I must say broadly and bluntly that neither the proverb nor Mr. D's dictum just above it is true. Not only are the facts against them but the philosophy is against them. What are the facts? One is that children who are brought up by the same parents and trained and educated together under the same circumstances and conditions, even in Christian Clergymen's homes and in Sunday schools, turn out sometimes to be totally different in character, some of them becoming good exemplary citizens and others of them just the reverse—thieves, ruffians, grakes and murderers. Then the old necessarily any reflection on parents or teachers, because "you can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear" and of two children of the same parents one may be at birth a "sow's ear" metaphorically speaking, while the other is the genuine silk fabric—or, at any rate, the "raw material" for the "silk purse"! Education and moral training may do a great deal, but nature also has a deal to do with the matter. All that the very best system of education and the most exemplary moral and religious training can do is to make the best of the "raw material"—such as it is—in every child. If the raw material is good and the molding just right a good specimen of humanity will be turned out every time. If the material is bad the product will not be good, no matter how passable he may appear in fair weather. If the material is a sort of average quality a fairly decent citizen may be produced by the right method. But, my friend, you can no more make a first class man or woman out of bad material than I can make a first class whiffletree out of a basswood tree. Were your philosophy true both things could be done. You may take the basswood stick, and, by applying mechanical art, make a splendid looking whiffletree out of it, and, finished off with paint and varnish, nobody could tell without close inspection or a test that that whiffletree was very weak and no good at all for a heavy load. So long as you leave it on the hook as a sample, or use it very tenderly, it will do fairly well and never reveal its weakness, but put it to the test and the whiffletree is designed to do its duty in two. Make your whiffletree properly out of oak, or iron, and it will do its work and stand the test. But as whiffletrees are made of trees and as basswood is a tree why should basswood not make a good whiffletree? Simply because

"can be easily conquered" if taken in hand in time in early childhood. Very well: we seek out a young darkey born of parents who have been for generations robbing hen roosts and melon patches. The youngster's cranium fairly bulges with Secretiveness, Acquisitiveness, and Alimentiveness, while above that region of his pate and front of it are regular cranial valleys which ought to have been filled in with some of that "grey matter" which goes to produce honesty and intelligence. We take this dusky and dubious young specimen of the genus homo to our learned friend and ask him to put his educational theory into practice on him and make him up (and over) into a good, honest citizen. Mr. D. puts in, say, fifteen years on his charge in a faithful, well directed, and even desperate attempt to reduce those "bulges" and fill up those "valleys." But at the end of the long tuition and persistent training the bulges are there all the same, and the valleys are there; and were I a betting man I would go ten thousand to one that that darkey gets the "bulge" on his foster-father the first chance he gets at a melon patch on a July day!

Bear in mind I am not disparaging the utility and power of early education and moral training. Far from it. I am only showing that they will not do what our friend says they will—impossibilities. Suppose we give Mr. D. a better subject—one whose ancestors had not done so much in the melon and roost business, and whose cranium showed up fair to middling, but one who, under bad training and surroundings would develop into a Special open air services are to be held, during the summer season, on the site of the proposed new Anglican Church at Roblin, the first of the series being announced for Wednesday night next at 7.30. These services will very probably prove to be satisfactory and we wish the promoters much success in their work.

Having is nearly finished, the only labor being in cutting it. It is only about one quarter of a crop around here. The grain crop will also be light if the present dry weather continues.

Statute labor is about all completed. Our contractors, Messrs Perry and Donnelly, are busily engaged at present filling their contracts.

Excursions are all the rage now. The majority from around here attended the R. C. Picnic at Varty Lake on the 25th inst. Several attended the races at Napanee on Monday and Tuesday also.

School has closed for vacation. The School house will be repaired during the holidays.

Strawberries in this section are about finished, the dry weather has shortened them up.

The news from here is scarce at present as people do a lot of talking and very little doing and not much going.

It is rumored that our minister Mr. McEachern is going to purchase a pair of horses from a certain man in our midst.

PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY.

Mrs. Robert Milligan, Napanee, was the guest of Mrs. Bruce Johnson, Dominion Day.

When returning home from town Monday evening a horse belonging to Mr. A. Taylor, Sophiasburgh, becoming frightened ran away. Miss Annie Taylor in attempting to jump from the wagon was thrown with great force to the ground, breaking her arm above the wrist. What might have been a more serious accident was averted by the presence of mind of one of the little boys, who, clinging to the reins guided the horse with great skill in and out among the numerous carriages on the road, and finally brought him to a standstill after an exciting half mile run.

Etian Unger, Napanee Road, spent Sunday and Monday in the County ostensibly to visit friends and attend the military demonstration in Picton, but, sub rosa, there was a far greater attraction here for him.

The entertainment held in Picton on Dominion Day was a most successful and pleasant affair. The day was all that could be desired, fair and cool, and our town, always a pretty one, excelled itself in beauty. Flags fluttered everywhere, beautiful arches spanned the principal are made of trees and as basswood is a tree why should basswood not make a good whittletree? Simply because there is a natural difference in the quality of the different trees, as the timber varies in fiber from the hard and strong to the coarse and weak. And, bear in mind, no matter what cultivation and care you bestow upon a young basswood even from the seed you can never do more than make a good basswood of it; you cannot harden or refine the fiber. No amount of cultivation will make hard wood of it.

Now, sir this comparison holds good with human beings. There is just as much difference naturally in them as in trees, and a much greater variety. Not only is this fact patent, prima facie, but science proves it. All experience proves it. Take your human basswood sprout and educate, and train, and cultivate him as you like—do your best, and you can only make a good basswood man of him. The timber will be soft in spite of everything. He may be varnished and polished off nicely by education and training, and, like the whittletree, look first rate, and get along passably well, especially in the sunshine of prosperity; but let adversity come, let the cold blast from the north strike him fiercely and he goes down, while the man of oaken fiber stands firm and strong and defies all the winds of adversity and all the wiles of the tempters.

Mr. Ducentre refers to the horse to illustrate and prove his position as to the transforming power of early training and education. Unfortunate is that for him and fortunate for me, as I would ask no better illustration and proof of my own position than the case of the horse. I fully agree with Mr. Ducentre that the proper time to begin to train a horse is when "the horse is a colt." I have raised them and trained them to do the ordinary duties and common work of a good horse and I know whereof I speak. I also agree that you cannot make the most and the best of the horse unless you begin the education and training when he is young. There is no disagreement here, but that is not the vital part of the question at all. No matter how early you begin the training or how good your system may be all you can do is to make the best and the most of the raw material before you in the colt. You can develop no trait, or power, or ability, in the colt or horse of which his natural organization is or was incapable. That is my contention and that is all I am contending for in these premises. But Mr. Ducentre is contending for more in the case of both the human and the lower animal, if I rightly understand him. And now let us put his philosophy to the practical test. I take a Clyde colt to Mr. Ducentre or, if you please, to the most expert horse trainer in the world, and I say to him "here is a colt—a likely, fine colt. I want you to take and raise him and train him for the ring and the turf. I want you to develop and draw out the speed that is in him so that he may become a famous trotter and beat the record." The horse-trainer looks at me with a smile of contempt. He says—"Do you take me for a fool? There is no speed in that colt to develop, so how can I develop speed in him?" I reply—"Is not that a fine colt? Are not all famous trotters developed from colts? Why then, can you not make a trotter out of this one? My friend D. here says the thing can be done." "I cannot do it," he replies, "simply because nature has not done her part to begin with. This colt is not built for speed, but for strength. I can make a famous draft horse out of him." Mr. D. goes off to think the matter over and to re-construct his philosophy. But hold a minute! We have not done yet. Mr. D. says, speaking now of the human, cranium showed up fair to middling, but one who, under bad training and surroundings would develop into a first rate thief and liar. We give this subject over to Mr. D.; and I have no hesitation in admitting that he might in the fifteen years of training make of him a pretty fair specimen, who would not think of visiting the coop or the melon patch surreptitiously provided you gave him chicken and melon in reasonable quantity; but if you failed to do this, and there was a melon patch convenient, and the days were dog days, and the opportunity was present in good shape, I would not undertake to be responsible for the result. The temptation being so strong the basswood timber would in all probability give way.

Yours etc.
ALLEN PRINGLE.

A PRACTICAL COLLEGE.

We have received a copy of the annual announcement of the Veterinary College to be opened October 1st, in Kingston, in connection with Queen's University. The new school is intended to give young men such a knowledge of the diseases of domestic animals as will qualify for the practice of the profession of veterinary surgeons. It is also intended to give to farmers' sons and stock raisers such a knowledge of veterinary science as will enable them to treat their stock intelligently, breed them scientifically, and, in case of serious sickness, administer temporary relief until the services of a regularly qualified veterinary surgeon can be obtained. Geo. W. Bell, V. S., Kingston, will be glad to furnish any of our readers with further information regarding the College, or the Dairy School, which stands beside it.

CURED OF DYSPEPSIA.

A Severe Case Cured by Burdock Blood Bitters after other treatment had Failed.

GENTLEMEN—After being tormented by three doctors for Dyspepsia I decided to try Burdock Blood Bitters. By the time I had taken two bottles of the B. B. B. I was completely cured and have since been strong and well. When I was suffering from Dyspepsia I was so weak and thin I could hardly walk, but I now weigh over 160 pounds and feel as well as ever I did in my life.

could be desired, fair and cool, and our town, always a pretty one, excelled itself in beauty. Flags fluttered everywhere, beautiful arches spanned the principal roadways, bright bunting and mottoes of welcome were to be seen in all directions. Early in the morning the town was full of people all eager to see the visiting battalions. At 10.30 the park was crowded and the three battalions, viz., the 57th, Peterboro Rangers, the 15th, Argyle Light Infantry, Belleville, and the 14th, Princess of Wales Own Rifles, of Kingston, were drawn up for review. Then forming in line they marched through the principal streets, returning to the park about 12 o'clock. In the afternoon athletic exercises was the order of the day, and in the evening a band concert and the march to the boat. The day ended in a grand ball given by the officers of the 16th battalion, Picton, in honor of their guests. Everyone was apparently well pleased with the day and we felt like helping some of the boys sing "For they are jolly good fellows."

CONWAY.

Well Mr. Editor as you have not heard from me for some time I will send you a little news from Conway and its suburbs.

Crops around here are looking badly, and rain is needed very much.

What is that song we hear Martha singing. This seems to be it:

I long to see that hour when I hear the clock strike

For then it is the time that teachers work is over.

And very soon I see the day, and then it's wheel

And then it is not very long before our game is

But then my great desire which I would not

George is busy breaking his colt; it is a dandy. He says it will have good eyes to help him hunt crabs, as it is fun catching them when you know where they are.

Farmers are busy with their hay; it is a light crop.

John says stock raising is a poor business but if calves were plentiful he would not mind it as long as he did not get afraid.

Rheumatism seems to be prevalent around here. It must be bad for one's health to be out in the evening air viewing flowers, especially those called the Sweet Williams.

Quite a number from here attended the festival at Sillsville on Thursday evening. It was a success.

Mr. Henry Sheppard, Toronto, was visiting at Mr. Tom Wisikin's on Thursday.

DENBIGH.

After weeks of hot, dry weather we have at last been favoured on Wednesday last with a good rain, and our growing crops have a much improved appearance, though it came too late to do the old meadows much good, which are mostly so dried up that they will hardly pay for cutting.

"Raising bees" has been the order of the day lately.

Herman Glasser has built a fine frame barn. Reinhold Letold a few days ago raised the frame of a similar one (45 x 60ft) with basement stables under it. A SEASON Of Dread And Fear for Thousands of People.

If You Would Banish the Blues and all Your Other Distresses USE PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND.

Yes, this is just the season when we hear men and women lamenting about their halfdead condition. They find that physical and mental energy has deserted them, and they are sinking deeply into the pit of despondency.

The hot weather invariably produces thousands of miserable feeling mortals. They lack nerve force, strength and vitality. They are usually tormented by dyspepsia, flatulence, biliousness, heart trouble, constipation, nervousness and sleeplessness, they cannot rest day or night, and life becomes a burden heavy and intolerable.

The great recuperator, strength and healthgiver for such weary, worn-out and suffering people is Paine's Celery Compound, now so universally approved of by medical men.

Paine's Celery Compound in its peculiar composition, combines the best producers of healthy and pure blood, the first essential to perfect health, strength and activity. When the great medium is used in summer languor, irritability, nervousness and sleeplessness are permanently banished, and men and women go about their duties with a vim, will and energy that indicates health and robustness. Use Paine's Celery Compound at once, if you would enjoy life in the hot weather.

stuff that is selling for that. To show the hollowness of this contention we published an article from the Montreal
Star, containing the statement of Thos.
Fox, Inland Revenue Inspector, that he had tested two samples of American coal oil, one from Rochester and the other from Boston, and they were a first rate oil and stood a test much higher than the Governmental requirement. At the time that the test was made, Dec. 8th 1892, the oil tested was retailing in Boston and Rochester for from 8 to 10 cents per gallon, while the same oil was being sold in Montreal for 28 cents per gallon. The Beaver displays its ignorance of the question by referring to the absurdity of claiming that the duty of 100 per cent on coal would cause oil to be retailed in Canada for 28 cents per gallon while it was being retailed in the streets of Boston at from 8 to 12 cents a gallon. It asks: "If the oil would stand our Canadian flash test, as it is claimed, what was there in the duty to double and treble the retail price of it between the two countries?" It is plain that the bare duty as it stood at that time could not do it all; but there are other ways of taxing commerce than the levying of duties. For the information of the Beaver writer
we will note roughly how this enormous advance in price was built up.
The duty stood at the time at 7-1/2 cents per Imperial gallon. There was the addition of freight when Montreal is compared with Boston; and the inland revenue officer's inspection fee of 30 cents a barrel. Then there was the requirement that the Canadian importer must bring in his oil in barrels containing not more than 50 gallons each. The effects of this was enumerated as follows by the Montreal Star:

- (a) It prohibits the importer taking advantage of the universal method, both in Canada and the States, of having his oil pumped into tank cars at the refinery, and dealing with it in large tanks down to the retailer's door.
- (b) It compels him to buy high priced barrels in the oil regions, thus entirely shutting out the Canadian cooper.
- (c) It makes him pay freight on these barrels from Pennsylvania to Montreal.
- (d) It hinders him from having economical terminal facilities at Montreal, which do so much to lower the price of oil in large American cities.
- (e) It brings losses in leakage and deterioration, and compels extra handling several times over.
- (f) It multiplies him of the duty on the barrel (40 cents each.

Its other statements re the bonused sugar monopolists are hardly worth noticing. The Beaver maintains that a 100 per cent duty doesn't raise the price of coal oil on the Canadian consumer to any perceptible extent, yet it speaks of the relief afforded the Canadian consumer when the Tory Government was forced to lower the duties on sugar because the American Government abolished them altogether.

UNGRATIFIED DESIRE.

He Failed to Meet the New Yorker He Was Most Anxious to See.

One day on a Broadway car I took a seat beside an old chap whose every look told of Uncle Josh and haystacks, and I was scarcely down before I noticed that he was eyeing me very sharply. By and by he put his hand up to his mouth and whispered behind it:
"Say! I want to ask ye sunthin!"
"All right."
"Won't get mad and hit me on the nose?"
"Certainly not."
"Well, I want to ask if you're a pickpocket?"
"Why do you ask?"
"Because I'm allus readin' about 'em, and afore I left home I told the old woman I was goin' to keep my eyes open and try and ketch onto one."
"You want to see what he looks like?"
"That's it—that's it!"
"Well, I'm sorry to disappoint you,
but I'm no pickpocket."
"Pshaw! but I jest hoped you was!"
he exclaimed, in disappointed tones.
"When you came in the door I told to myself that you was a reg'lar pickpocket, and I'd better take a good look at you. It's not your fault, of course, but I kinder feel put out about it."
"If I were a pickpocket it would be an easy matter to get that watch of yours."

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER

NOW THERE'S A NEW TROUBLE IN THE FAMILY.

Mr. B. Buys a Book and Brings It Home
—Mrs. B. Will Have Nothing to do with
It—Young Bowser Decides the Case Against the Old Man.

"Last night," said Mr. Bowser, as he looked up from his paper and broke a silence which had lasted a quarter of an hour—"last night I heard our child moaning in his sleep, and I noticed that he looked pale and hollow-eyed this morning. I suppose you know what ails him?"

"Nothing ails him, Mr. Bowser—nothing but too much play. You can't find a healthier child in the whole town."

"I hope it is true, but I doubt it. Having him under your eye every hour in the day, you do not notice a change as I do. This afternoon a woman came into the office selling a book on "How to Bring Up Children." I had only to glance at it to see that it was just what you wanted. It is full of—"

"Who wrote it?" sharply demanded Mrs. Bowser.

"I'll show you the book. It tells all about mumps, measles, chicken-pox and everything else likely to a child, and

"DO YOU KNOW THAT YOU ARE TALKING TO THAT CHILD'S FATHER?"

also prescribes the cure. Let's see? It's by Annie Katherine White. Did you ever hear of her?"

"Never, and I don't want to! It's ten to one that she never was a mother and doesn't know a case of mumps from falling off a fence! For the land's sake don't get the idea that our child wants dosing!"

Our child may be all right, Mrs. Bowser, or he may be all wrong. It won't hurt anything to read what the woman says. For instance, she gives the pre-monitory symptoms of measles, and says that a mother—

"He had measles three months ago!"
"Well, here's all about whooping cough. Twenty-four hours before the cough comes the patient is restless, the tongue coated and the whites of the eyes—"

"I know all about that, and it will be quite useless for you to go up to his bed to see if the whites of his eyes have turned blue or green. You have hardly looked at him for three months past, and now all of a sudden you are greatly worried over his condition!"

"Mrs. Bowser!" said Bowser, as he stood up and flourished the book in his hand, "do you know that you are talking to that child's father?"

"Of course I do!"

"Then don't talk in that way! As that child's father I naturally love him.
I feel anxious about his health. A woman who has probably reared a dozen children of her own writes a book on how to treat children. I buy it and bring it home to you to save worry and doctor's bills, and you take it as a gre-vious insult. Here is what the book says about mumps. I was reading it on the car coming home, and as near as I can make out our boy will be down with mumps before sunrise to-morrow. It says that the premonitory symptom—"

"How many times do children have the mumps?" quietly asked Mrs. Bowser.

"H-how many times? Why do you ask?"

"Because he had 'em six months ago.
Your natural anxiety about your offspring should have made you remember and sigh and sob? Perhaps not, but I have, and this book says those are the premonitory symptoms of spinal meningitis. Before the clock strikes midnight we may be childless!"

"And before the clock strikes ten I'll throw that book into the stove!" she hotly replied. "The idea of an old maid writing a book to tell mothers how to bring up children! And the idea of your paying two or three dollars for such nonsense!"

"Am I in my own house, or am I not?"
shouted Mr. Bowser, as he rose up and glared at her.

"Yes, of course," she answered.

"And am I the father of that child?"

"Of course."

"Then I am going to see him and determine for myself whether he will live the night out or die before another sur-rises. If you wish to accompany me to his—"

But just then young Bowser, who had been awakened by his father's loud talk, came down stairs in his night-dress, and he presented such a picture of good health that Mr. Bowser sat down with the feeling that he had lost his case. It wasn't until Mrs. Bowser was leading the boy back to bed that the father found words to say:

"Death may not have actually placed its mark upon his brow, but it can't be far off. I'll look him over in the morning."

"And the lawyers—the alimony—custody of the child, and so forth?" she queried as she paused on the stairs.

He glared and glared, but made no reply, and when she was out of sight he opened a window and threw the book at a cat on the fence, and then sat down and whispered to himself:

"That's another close call for me, and if I don't put my foot right down I'll be turned right out of my own house inside of a month."

A Natural Curiosity.

"Charley, dear," said Mrs. Hunnimune, "I don't think I take enough interest in things that men care for—Won't you tell me something about baseball?"

"Of course. Anything that I can."
"I've noticed that sometimes when a club gets beat it's because the umpire doesn't do right."

"Yes."

"And sometimes because the weather isn't right."

"Yes."

"And sometimes because the audience
doesn't do right."

"Yes."

"Well, Charley, dear, what I want to know is, what the players have to do with the game."—Washington Star.

COAL OIL AGAIN.
The Napanee Beaver, in an article about a column and a half in length, endeavored last week to controvert our statements of the previous week. The attempt was lamentably weak, for not one of our contentions was successfully met, although the Beaver writer succeeded admirably in evading them. Our contemporary, some time ago, published the canard that American coal oil was of a dangerous quality, and that coal oil lamp explosions in Canada were due in almost every instance to the using of cheap American coal oil. It cited the fatal accident that befell Mrs. Tovell, of Toronto Junction, as a case in point, and we have asserted and again repeat that it had no more knowledge of the brand of oil used by the deceased lady than the man in the moon. American coal oil coming into Canada is subjected to a higher flash test than Canadian oil, and instead of being cheap it is dearer here than our own oil.
We pointed out that American coal oil was retailing in the border cities of the United States for 8 and 10 cents per gallon, and the Beaver met this by saying it is only the cheap and nasty easy matter to get that watch of yours."

"Would it?" he chuckled. "Wall, mebbe so, but the chain is tied to my pocket with a string and the watch is in my left bootleg. I've got an old wallet here, but she's empty, and them $27 is down in 'tother boot-leg with my jack-knife and five nickels. Say! It's too blamed bad you hain't a pickpocket. I jest wanted ye to fumble around for about half an hour, and then I was goin' to tickle ye in the ribs and ha! ha! ha! and ask if yer mother knew ye was out to-day, and if ye smelt anythin' like new mown hay around here!"—Detroit Free Press.

Inference.

"No, dear. What made you think he was?"
"Cause he wasn't any good after he got his hair cut."

AN ARTFUL DODGER.
The Chicago Man Tells How He Escapes From Legal Service.
"I'm going down to Ohio to-night," said the first business man.
"I thought you had over a dozen people with writs of ne exeat waiting for you," remarked the second business man.
"So I have."

"Then how in thunder do you expect to be back in Chicago on Tuesday to attend that directors' meeting?"
"Easily enough. You see I have written to an old friend to meet me a few miles outside of the State line with a horse and buggy. I have timed my trip so that I shall arrive about 11 o'clock at the place of rendezvous, and I shall have a nice quiet drive, reaching town just after midnight on Saturday. According to the law, that will be Sunday—a day when they can't arrest me."
"That's a pretty bright idea, but how are you going to get away again?"
"Promptly at one hour before midnight on Sunday my friend with the buggy will be at the hotel, and I shall depart as I came, getting outside the State just in time to escape service." I have been dodging in and out of Ohio in this way for about a year. People who are perfect strangers to me come up and shake their fists in my face and say:
"Just you wait until Monday morning. I'll put you in the jug, sure!"
"Doesn't it get rather monotonous?"
"Yes, but there isn't anything else to be done. I went to Ohio to negotiate a deal during the gas boom, and when the deal failed every fellow who had invested ten cents in the enterprise wanted my heart's blood. Fortunately I owned the patents, and when they all showed the white feather I promptly removed the concern to Chicago. Some day I shall surprise these fellows by going into town on a Pullman and paying them dollar for dollar, and then they'll every one of them declare they were always my best friend. That's the way of the world."—Chicago Dispatch.

"Ye-es—Um! Yes, I do remember that he had the mumps, or what you called the mumps. I suppose he has also had the chicken-pox?"
"Certainly he has!"
"And the whooping cough?"
"Yes, when he was only eight months old."
"Mrs. Bowser, when I looked into that boy's face this morning I was shocked. I tell you his system is all out of gear, and he needs something to brace him up. As near as I can make out from this book he has some ailment of his liver, and I propose—"
"You propose to give him some of your dope?" she finished, as he hesitated.

"Mrs. Bowser, if that child has worms—if the seal of death has already been stamped—"
"But he has no worms," she interrupted. "If anything ails the child he is too healthy. If you want to take 400 different sorts of sarsaparillas, invigorators, tonics, cures and all that I have no objections, but for mercy's sake don't let a fad about our child."
"Fad! Fad! It is a fad. Then it's a fad, is it, to discover the symptoms of a deadly disease and apply the remedy in time. As a loving father of that child it is not only my duty but my privilege to look him over and guard him. That hectic flush on his face this evening did not escape my notice. For all you know he may be coming down with scarlet fever."
"That hectic flush was caused by his playing circus and standing on his head," replied Mrs. Bowser. "He gets ten hours' sleep every night, eats like a man, and never even has a sore throat."
"Have you heard him moan out in his sleep, Mrs. Bowser—moan and groan

THE WOMEN.
Scene: The Boudoir. Time, 3 P.M.
The Guest—Well, I must go now! Oh, say, did you hear of Gladys's engagement?
(The full details for another hour.)
The Guest—Really, now, I must hurry home! Oh, about those challies! You can get them at Styles & Wares's. (More discourse about the latest spring fashions; clock chimes 6.)
The Guest—Dear me! How the time flies! Well, good-by, dear—you heard about Mrs. Flytte?—oh, dreadfully talked about, and—(Exhaustive resume of the lady's failings.)
The Hostess—Tea is served. Won't you stay?
The Guest—Well, I'm sure I oughtn't, but I might as well.
(Does so.)

THE MEN.
Scene: The Club. Time 3 A.M.
The Deal—Say, I thought we were to stop at 2 o'clock! Here it's 3 already; suppose we have three rounds of jack pots and quit?
(Jack pots fill up the time till 4.)
The Age—Well, I hate to quit so much ahead. What do you say to just one more round? See if I can't lose this stack!
(Shuffling, cutting, dealing and bluffing for another half hour.)
The Bet—I'm the victim, it seems. Suppose we have a $2 jack as a wind-up?
(Two dollar jack gets under way.)
The Cut (looking at watch)—5 o'clock! Well, there's no use stopping at this hour. Let's play the day in.
(They do.)

Can't Give 'Em Up Now.

Reuben—Say, Silas, guess you'll hater git th' ole woman one o' them bicycles. All th' gals has 'em.
Silas—No, indeed, I've been wearin' th' pants in this family too long ter give 'em up now.

Only a Question of Time.
"That little bill?" said the debtor, pleasantly. "Oh, yes, of course. Well, you need not worry about that any more. I've got things down to a system now."
"You've been a long time doing it," suggested the creditor.
"I realize it," returned the debtor, "but it's all right now. You see, $30 is more than I can afford to let go of at any one time, but now I can get it together without missing it. You see, a man never misses his small change, so I've bought a little bank that I can drop it into every night. You've no idea how fast it accumulates."
"I've heard of the plan before," said the creditor. "If a man lives up to it and doesn't hold out on the bank it mounts up rapidly."
"Oh, I live up to it," protested the debtor. "I put every cent of small change into it every night, and it's all for you."
"I'm ay hope, then—"

Pellets of Earth Forced Into Oyster Shells Develop to Pearls.

A pearl is the result of an oyster's effort to remove a source of irritation. If a grain of sand or some other hard substance finds its way into the shell the oyster begins coating it with nacre, which gives the irritating intruder a smooth exterior. The oyster deposits over the offending object as long as it remains a source of irritation, and the Chinese have taken advantage of this peculiarity of the solitary mollusk. They make little pellets of earth which has been dried and powdered with the juice of camphor seeds, and during May and June plant these in the oyster. The shell is opened with a mother-of-pearl knife, care being taken not to injure the oyster, and the earth peas are laid under the oyster's beard. The treated mollusks are then placed in canals and pools, and left undisturbed until November, when they are dredged up, opened, and the nacre-covered pellets removed with sharp knives. The pellets are usually found fastened tightly to the inner surface of the shells.

The Chinese pearl farmer then turns jeweler. He drills a little hole into the shell and removes the dirt. He then drills a hole into the shell and removes the dirt. The cavity is filled with yellow rosin, and the opening sealed neatly with a tiny bit of mother of pearl.

But a Frenchman has improved on this method. He found that the Chinese killed many oysters by forcing the shell open to deposit the earth pellets. The ingenious Frenchman bored holes in the shells of pearl oysters with a small drill and then introduced through the opening little globules of glass. He plugged the holes with corks and then left the oysters alone to manufacture pearls. In six months the glass nucleus was covered with a pearly deposit, and the Frenchman reaped a beautiful harvest of pearls. He did not have to bore holes in the pearls to remove the centre, and the pearls brought higher prices than the pearls made by the Chinese.

These artificial pearls have much of the lustre and beauty of the real gems, but are sold at a much lower rate by honest jewelers. Experts can color pearls black, pink, gray and other colors by the use of chemicals. For instance, a pearl put in nitrate of silver turns black. But pearl raisers know a trick worth two of that. Certain kinds of fresh water mussels bear

"If the foolmen would mind their own business there would be no trouble," replied Mrs. Snifter.

"That's it," responded Snifter. "I'm impressed more and more every day with the forwardness of the modern woman."

"There's certainly room enough in the world for all to live."

"Yes, my dear, but the modern woman is destined to destroy all that is lovable in the very thought of woman."

"It seems to me," said Mrs. Snifter, "that there is not that sympathy between men and women that ought to exist."

"Ah, my dear, I have thought of that," but you know the modern woman has rendered such a thought distasteful—"

"But cannot men be gentlemanly?"

"Ah, my dear, you don't understand. The modern woman—"

"Who is she?"

tain kinds of fresh water mussels bear pink pearls, and pearl oysters produce different colored pearls according to the part of the oyster which is irritated by the foreign substance. The artificial pearl producer knows this, and plants his seed accordingly. In Washington is an artificial pink pearl as large as a pigeon's egg, and its heart is a bit of beeswax.

Perfectly round pearls which weigh over twenty-five grains each, are scarce and command large prices, but such pearls are natural. Artificial pearls are usually flat on one side.—Chicago Record.

Old Men and the Bicycle.

Not less pleasing than the sight of the young women and young men on their bicycles is the sight of the old chaps. Lots of graybeards can be seen along the up-town avenues wheeling at a speed that must be admired. Two or three of them challenged a squad of their juniors to a race yesterday, and beat them badly, beat even the energetic damsels who joined in the race. They sat erect, got a good grip, and worked their thighs from the finger tips to the shoulder blades, from the big toe to the illum, and even, it seemed, up to the ribs. A determined old chap on a bicycle can often give points to the youngsters.

A good time for bicycling at this season of the year is the early morning, as early perhaps, as 4 o'clock, when the air is cool and the weather fair. One may start at that hour, or at 5, after a solid sleep of eight or nine hours, and after taking a cup of coffee, or a tumbler of hot water, with a crust of bread or a hard ship cracker, or, better still, a half of one of those little round hard and crisp crackers. It is best not to take too long a run then—well, say a half hour's run; for the business of the day must be attended to, and one should not waste his strength before beginning it. It is far better and healthier for a bicyclist to go out soon after dawn than at night, when it is dark. A spectacle of 5,000 or 10,000 wheelers, men and women, on the Boulevard, at 5 or 6 o'clock in the morning, would be worth looking at.—New York Sun.

The First Railroads.

The Stockton and Darlington line in England (the first complete railroad in the world), was open for traffic on the 27th of September, 1825, and one of George Stephenson's engines was tried. It was attached to a train consisting of six waggons loaded with coal and flour; after these came twenty-one passenger coaches, and, lastly, six more waggons of coal, making in all a train of thirty-eight vehicles. The first railroad in America was the Mohawk & Hudson railroad. The length of this road was sixteen miles, and it extended from Albany to Schenectady, N. Y. A charter was granted the company until 1830. It was finished in 1831. Both locomotive engines and horses were used on this road. At first stationary engines were used. They were placed on the top of the hills, and the train was hauled up the hill or let down, by a strong rope. The brakemen used hand-levers to stop or check the train. The first steam railroad passenger train was run on this road in 1831. The engine was named John Bull. It was imported from England; its weight was four tons. The engineer was John Hays, an Englishman. Among the fifteen passengers who rode in the two coaches were James Alexander, president Commercial Bank; Charles E. Dudley, of the Dudley observatory; Jacob Hays, high constable of New York; ex-Gov. Joseph C. Yates and Thurlow Weed.

Pale pink is the popular color in undressed kid gloves for evening wear, and pale yellow and very light tan are worn in the afternoon, with a darker shade of tan for morning and traveling. CHAPTER I.
A TASTE OF RICHES.

It is wonderful how little benefit some men derive from a good morality and a sound philosophy. Defective observation leads the best philosophy astray, and allows virtue to grope in vain for its reward. The good man who avoids evil only because he does not see its allurements, will also miss a great deal which is both desirable and permissible in this world.

With so much by way of preface it may be safe to say that the young man who will now be introduced had led an exemplary life without finding any satisfaction in it. He had taken for his guiding rule the advice of Schiller that happiness is to be found in the daily performance of a task of routine. It will be remembered that the same eminent gentleman advised writing with one's feet in a tub of ice water, but most of us do not like it. There is, however, a great deal of value in the routine idea, but the trouble with it in practice is that many people do not know what to occupy themselves with after the daily task is done.

William Russell was one of these. He had held a clerkship for eight years, on a slowly-increasing salary, and had been temperate, frugal, and industrious. He had as much interest in his work as if he had been a car-horse; but he would rather have been employed than idle. Thinking he regarded as an unsafe occupation for a man who knew how to analyze the facts of existence, as he did. That was the trouble; he knew how to analyze them but he didn't know the facts. He had long ago given up ambition, friendship, love, and many other sweet and profitable things because he regarded them as delusions.

Then came a day when he began to regard the consolations of his daily task of routine as delusions also. He was as good a sample of the discouraged young man as could have been found in New York. He had hitherto maintained a certain contentment bolstered up by prejudice in favor of his own philosophy; and when this thin support gave way there was no mending it. About this time he was in his clerkship, naturally enough, perhaps, for a man in that condition of mind is not a valuable employee. He did not regard the loss of the position as a calamity, and he made no attempt to get another. He simply lived on his small savings without any plan whatever for the day when they should be gone. If any suggestion of a life worth living came into his mind, he would man behind him stamped impatiently as if a personal injury had been inflicted upon him, and not upon the man who ate the pie.

An unprejudiced observer would have said that there was no cause for complaint. The men on the stools ate fast enough. Indeed it seemed as if nothing but choking to death could save from dying of indigestion. Quick feeding has been brought to such a science in New York that the philanthropist might well doubt which to pity more, the rich who eat so much in a minute or the poor who eat so little in a year.

The small tables in the Cafe Napoleon were besieged almost as hotly as was the lunch-counter. But Russell succeeded in securing a seat opposite a rusty old fellow who had just ordered a piece of apple pie and a glass of milk. Behind Russell were the four young men whom he had followed into the cafe. He duplicated the order given by one of them, and thereby laid himself liable to the proprietor of the Cafe Napoleon in the sum of $4.75. This lunch was the first extravagance the young man had committed in a good many years. The pint of good wine which was included in it was the first he had ever tasted. He enjoyed the experiment thoroughly. He was glad that he had decided to be a rich man for half an hour.

By and by the rusty old fellow finished his pie and milk, and departed. Russell learned who he was by a remark made by one of the young men.

"Did you see old Gilbert Ray take his usual frugal repast?" were the words he overheard. "He will leave four millions for his heirs to quarrel over, and his chief regret will be that he can not remain to take part in the controversy."

"He didn't leave any of that pie," said another. "I watched him chase the last little piece of crust all over his plate. He couldn't get it with his fork—had to shovel it in with his knife. I figured that his income while he was chasing it would buy a cart-load of pie."

"He isn't a bad old fellow after all," said the first speaker. "The story is that he started on a hundred dollars and had to borrow that. But he paid it on time and kept his credit up. There's the whole secret of the lender has an equal lack of confidence in final restitution.

When Russell closed in upon his tenth man he had begun to be discouraged. This person's name was Rawson, and he had been a clerk with Russell in the old times, but being of an ambitious disposition, he had abandoned salaried work for the real estate and mortgage business, wherein he had prospered to such an extent that he was reputed to be eating widows' houses at the rate of three square meals a day.

Russell hardly expected to find Rawson in his office as late as five o'clock, but there he sat surrounded by aggressive evidences of prosperity. Russell was embarrassed. He tried to remember some of the formulas with which Rawson himself used to approach the subject, but none of them seemed to fit the case in hand, so he said good afternoon, and hoped Mr. Rawson found business good. That prosperous gentleman, remembering a small balance against himself in their old accounts, supposed that Russell had come to collect it, and the thought excited his resentment. He blew a great cloud of smoke in Russell's direction and replied that business was bad, and he was much pressed for ready money.

"That's unfortunate for you," said Russell, "and for me, too, because I called—"

"I'm sorry, old man," said Rawson, "but I haven't a red cent. I just borrowed my car fare from the office boy, but I'm expecting a big bundle next week, and if you'll call Tuesday"—he made a benevolent gesture and added, in an inaudible tone: "I'll be in Buffalo."

Then Russell went out with a feeling of desperation in his heart, and meeting on the stairs a man whom he had not once before in his life, and Forks Being Unknown with ease. He made a finger do valiant duty was to return the

This was a beginning. A large circular tray of hope. He was already placed on a coarse wood dollar, and as an investment of high, served as bought a five-cent cigar with of this table exterior. Then he lay in wait in front of a tobacco store which was much frequented by men whom he knew.

Within five minutes an acquaintance approached with the evident intention of entering the store.

one of the arches to the cook, and the suggestion was received with applause. The question was becoming embarrassing, but just then a young man connected with the press, whom Russell knew, stepped into the restaurant to see whether any thing worthy of record was transpiring.

"What's the matter, Mr. Russell?" inquired this young man.

"I have just feasted upon the biceps of a dried ostrich and a cup of strange fluid called 'draw one,'" replied Russell, "and the only coin in my pocket happened to be plugged. If I understand the situation correctly the gentleman with the little shovel intends to make a griddle-cake of me."

"I thought somebody was getting killed," said the reporter, looking disappointed, "but if that's all the trouble, I can lend you a dollar easily enough."

"Thank you," said Russell, taking the dollar. "I will leave it at your office at four o'clock to-morrow." Then he made out an I. O. U. on a leaf of the reporter's note-book, paid the check and went out upon the street. He walked slowly along thinking of the queer incident. It was nothing in itself, and yet he found a new sensation in it. Three months ago it would have annoyed him. The thought that he had been unable to pay for so poor a meal would have oppressed him with a sense of poverty. But he had escaped that feeling altogether, and he wondered why.

The reason was plain enough, though he could not see it. Living as he had done, wholly in a monotonous routine, such small mishaps had always assumed exaggerated

SAFETY OF TRAINS.

In What Part Should the Cautious Ride?

One of the unsolved problems in rail-roading is the question as to the safest place on a train. Many have contended that it is just as safe on the engine as it is in the cars, and point to the fact that in many instances the engine has passed over a broken bridge while the balance of the train went down. Others insist that the rear car is the safest, because there are fewer rear end collisions than any other kind. There are people who are strong in the belief that there is no place of safety on a train, and that one runs as much risk in one spot as in another. On some roads special cars are always placed in the centre of the train, but for what purpose is not clear.

"That is a hard question to answer," said General Manager Bradbury, of the Lake Erie & Western, when interrogated, "for it is like asking where is the best place for a man to fall. The question of safety depends, in a measure, on the length of a train. A train made up of a smoker and a day coach could have no particularly safe spots, and the passenger would be in as much danger in the event of a collision in one car as in the other. On long trains I think that if there is any difference there is more safety in a car or two from the rear of a train. However, I generally ride in the rear car. Men have become old and grey as conductors and engineers, and yet young men are killed as often as any other."

"I should say two or three cars from the rear of a long train," said General Superintendent Van Winkle, of the Big Four. "If there is a head collision, the cars in front of the train take the brunt of the crash, and the cars are so well built that there is not much danger close to the rear of the train. This holds good in the event of a rear collision. Cars used in our fast trains are so heavily vestibuled that they could not spring over each other, as used to happen with the light coaches in use years ago. They are solidly compounded, and that fact prevents them from crushing each other. An engine plunging into a train could not go through two or three coaches. It might get part way into one coach, but that is all. The danger from crossing collisions, where one train strikes another on the side, is small. There are few such accidents nowadays. We all know that sometimes the rear car of a train running at high speed is 'whipped' from the rails on a sharp curve, but that seldom happens."

"The second car from the rear is about as safe as any," said General Manager Barnard, of the Peoria and Eastern. "I think myself the rear end of a train is safer for a passenger, for the reason that there are fewer rear end collisions than there are butting collisions. As to derailments, it has been demonstrated that the engine and one or two cars leaving the rails seldom pull other cars with them. When they go off the track, they break the train line. This sets the brakes, and stops the other cars. I usually ride at the rear end of the train, but I have never considered the question you have asked."—Indianapolis News.

TARTAR ON THE TEETH.

A Peculiar Disease That Makes Trouble to Many.

"People are losing their teeth from a new cause nowadays," said a dental surgeon to a Washington Star reporter. "It is a complaint which seems to have become common only within the last fifteen years or so. 'Recession' of the gums, it is called. Tartar is deposited at an abnormal rate, and this carbonate of lime secreted from the saliva pushes the gums back from the teeth."

"It is a very peculiar disease. In cases far advanced it can hardly be cured. That is to say, the tendency to an accumulation of tartar cannot be stopped. All that can be done is to prevent it from accumulating by scraping it away at intervals and by medicinal applications to the gums. In an early stage, however, the complaint is perfectly curable, and the tendency in most cases can be overcome. But much care and continual attention are required. Otherwise the person will have lost some of his teeth by the time he is forty years old, and after that the

A Pleasant Surprise.

The following story of a Century Diogenes is perfectly authentic. When King Frederick William IV. visited the Rhine provinces in the year 1844 he made a short stay at Wesel, where he called at the house of the oldest man in the kingdom, aged 106 years. He found him comfortably seated in an old armchair, smoking a pipe—his inseparable companion. On the King's arrival he rose to his feet and stepped forward a few paces, but his Majesty made him sit down again, and talked to him with the greatest freedom, the old man puffing away at his pipe all the time. When about to leave, the King asked him if he had any wish that it was in his power to gratify.

"No, thanks, your Majesty; I have all I want in this world," was the reply.

"Really! Just think for a moment. We mortals generally have some particular desire or aspiration."

"Well, sire, now I come to think of it; I might have a favor to ask. My doctor insists on my taking a walk every day on the ramparts. Every time I pass the powder magazine the sentry shouts to me from afar: 'Take the pipe out of your mouth, and as I walk very slowly, my pipe goes out every time. Now, if your Majesty would be good enough to order the sentry to let me smoke my pipe in peace all the way, I should consider it the greatest kindness you could confer on me for the rest of my natural life.'

The order was given, and the old fellow enjoyed the privilege for more than two years, and died at last with his pipe in his mouth.—Buch fur Alle.

Not In It.

Boston Girl—She is a very superior person. She belongs to the Mayflower mill.

Minneapolis Girl—Pshaw, that isn't in it a minute with one of our Minneapolis flour families.

Rather Mean.

"Speaking of dinners," said Hawkins, reminds me of something I overheard in these very rooms not two nights ago. I always knew Snooks was of a saving nature, but I never believed that the fellow was downright mean."

"How's that?" asked Bluffkins, indifferently.

"Well, it was like this. Tuesday night Snooks came in and began talking with Webb. 'I hear you're going away on Saturday,' said Snooks."

"Yes," answered Webb. "For three months."

"And what are you doing to-morrow night?"

"Wednesday," said Webb. "I have no engagement for Wednesday."

"And the next night?"

"That's Thursday. I dine with the Blues on that day."

"Dear, dear! That's a pity," said Snooks, with a good bluff at disappointment. "I wanted you to take dinner with us on that day."—Boston Budget.

PERHAPS

they usually maintain as cordial relations with each other as do those strange and uncongenial animals which the keepers of menageries drive into the "Happy Family" cage. Grizzled suspicion born of hard experience usurps the place of kindly mutual interest, and the preservation of armed neutrality is the sole condition of peace. But a man may sleep there if he has a willing conscience and a quiet neighbor.

It was a beautiful evening—so much of it as could struggle down between the tall buildings. The land of stars over Russell's head shone bright, but it was very narrow. Space so valuable in the city that one can not have enough even of the sky. But the influences of the night may be felt in the city if a man has a sensitive soul.

At one o'clock many of the down-town streets recognize the fact that the day is done. They give to the solitary wanderer a powerful impression of rest, but it is very different from that of sleeping woods and fields. The slumber of the city is oppressed, the air is heavy like that of a close room, and the grumble of traffic in the streets that are only half asleep resembles the groans of an uneasy dreamer whom the cares of the day pursue beyond the setting of the sun.

His Idea of Grace.

A young Chicago drummer was taking a vacation with his uncle in the country, and was suddenly called upon to ask the blessing, and not being accustomed to it he promptly tackled the difficulty in the following style: "We acknowledge the receipt of your favor of this date. Allow us to express our gratitude for this expression of good will. Trusting that our house may merit your confidence, and that we may have many good orders from you this fall, we are yours truly, amen." The old man will say grace hereafter.—Sea Coast Echoes.

Second Gossip.—Nivver as much as inside the house. But you just wait till we hev' a funeral of our own, an' we'll show 'em.

Change of Diet.

"I guess I'll have one of those Methodist broiled to-day," said the King of Mbwaka.

"May it please your Royal Highness," ventured the high chief steward, "the Presbyterian batch is much the fatter."

"You do what I tell you," thundered the monarch. "I have been eating Presbyterians for a week now, and the court physician has ordered a change of diet."

rest some of the teeth at the time he is forty years old, and after that the rest of them will go rapidly.

"The making of false teeth has arrived at great perfection, but at least they are poor substitutes. As I have said, this may be regarded as a new disease. At all events, it is only in recent years that it has become prevalent. It is important that people's attention should be called to it. From 7 years to 20 care must be taken of the teeth lest they decay. There is little danger of that after the 20th year is passed. But from that time on one should look out for tartar. A mouth affected in the way I speak of is almost worse than a badly decayed mouth. The trouble means certain loss of the teeth unless looked out for and treated.

How the Chinese Gamble.

A Chinaman, when his heart is in the business, makes an ideal gambler. He never gets excited or loses his nerve and no expression of feeling ever shows itself in his face. He wins or he loses with apparent indifference. Some of the ways in which he risks his money are novel and amusing. The other day a Gleaner representative happened to be in the Chinese club in this city and was introduced to a form of gambling which was exceedingly simple, yet one in which the participants seemed to take a great deal of interest. The reporter was given permission to write about what he saw. To commence with, those who wish to enter the game pay two or three shillings and write their names on separate slips of paper. These slips are shaken up in a hat and one is selected and placed in a small basket. This basket is suspended from the ceiling and the Chinaman makes their bets as to whose name is in the basket. The basket remains suspended for a fixed length of time. The lucky man whose name fate has selected, wins the pool.—Kingston, Jamaica Gleaner.

Welsbach Lamps in the Ballroom.

After a satisfactory experimental trial Welsbach lamps have been definitely adopted in the Sophienbad ball rooms, the most fashionable assembly rooms of Vienna. This would seem to dispose of the idea that ladies do not like this form of gas lighting any more than they like the electric light, because it makes their faces appear too pale. The first theatre in Germany to introduce the Welsbach lamp was one in Hamburg.

Mr. Jacob Wilcox of St. Thomas, Ontario, is one of the best known men in that vicinity. He is now, he says, an old man, but Hood's Sarsaparilla has made him feel young again.

"About a year ago I had a very severe attack of the grip, which resulted in my not having a well day for several months afterwards. I was completely run down and my system was in a Terrible Condition.

I lost flesh and became depressed in spirits. Finally a friend who had been benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla advised me to try it and I did so. I continued taking it until I used twelve bottles and today I can honestly say Hood's Sarsaparilla has restored me to my former health." JACOB WILCOX, St. Thomas, Ontario.

I have often thought that there are some queer specimens of human nature, but the most odd are those who set their minds on beating down a merchant on the price of goods, and yet if you want to buy anything from them, they always ask the highest price.

Regarding the candidate for a "sit" at Ottawa as senator, the following fits the case, "Some are born great, some achieve greatness and some have greatness thrust upon them."

There are wanted a few young men to sit around in the shop fronts, in the evenings and on Sundays a few being left yet unoccupied. Only those who can spit tobacco juice need apply.

Wanted, a few nails. They must be long enough to go through a two inch plank. Contributions will be received by the side walk repairer any time this summer.

Trilby cut quite a figure Dominion Day.

Judging from the reported trouble in some churches in Ontario, the passage "Peace be within thy walls" is not very appropriate. DAGON.

Last week's Beaver contained a paragraph giving the reason that lead the cricket club to deny the football team the use of the Park to play matches on. The reason given is: Taking possession of the cricket ground to practice football on without even asking the consent of the cricket club. The cricketers say had the footballers asked their consent in the first place they would have had no trouble in securing the grounds to play matches on. An article in THE EXPRESS, abusing one of the members of the cricket club, together with other stories, are given as the final reasons that settled the cricket club in their decision, "and the present football club need never expect to be permitted to play on the grounds." We may just state here that THE EXPRESS does not deal in abuse, and did not abuse any member of the cricket club. We simply questioned the wisdom of the actions of one of the cricketers. It was not so much what he did we found fault with, but rather they way he took of doing it. The football boys were in no way responsible for the appearance of that article and the cricketers should not have allowed it to weigh against them in arriving at their decision. That they are in earnest in this decision is borne out by their action in bringing pressure to bear on the Driving Park Association to prevent the football match on Dominion Day that the secretary of the Association had authorized the captain of the football team to arrange for, and which was arranged for and advertised on the bills. The match had to be declared off almost at the last moment, because the cricket club informed the secretary of the Napanee Driving Park Association that they would not allow the Napanee football club to play on the Park, although they were not adverse to any other club playing there. Even if the cricketers would allow the foot ball team to play matches on the Park, suitable ground for practising on is badly needed, and we hope that immediate steps will be taken to provide the boys with a place suitable to practice and play matches on, for until that is done they will be forced to go outside of town, whenever they have a match on, for that need of courtesy which is denied them at home.
